Data Protection Officer as a Service

What is a DPO?
A Data Protection Officer (DPO) is a position within an organisation that acts as an independent advocate for the proper care and use of personal information. Under the General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR) all businesses that hold any form of personal information on any individual within the European Union, may need legally appoint a data protection officer.

DPO as a Service
DPO as a service is a practical and cost-effective solution for organisations that do not have the requisite data protection expertise and knowledge to fulfil their data protection officer (DPO) obligations under the General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR).

By outsourcing DPO tasks and duties to a managed service provider, you get access to expert advice and guidance that helps you to address the compliance demands of the GDPR while staying focused on your core business activities.

How can we help?
Caretower offer a DPO as a Service (DPOaaS) approach to the GDPR, through the consultancy of establishing your processes, security, implementing the necessary changes, being responsible for suggesting change to the business and then continually updating the business as compliance and legislation changes. The DPOaaS provides regular reviews to deal with any issues or questions arising and will also assist with all Data Subject Access Requests.

Always on hand
the DPOaaS will be on hand when there is a breach, to help guide the business through the notifications processes and the ‘what to do next’ – enabling the organisation to minimise the potential enforcement actions imposed by the ICO.

An ideal service for any organisation that processes reasonable volumes of Personal Identifiable Data.

A flexible pre-pay service whereby your company purchases 4/8/12 days a year that are converted to flexible offerings of 32/64/96 hours. Once you have used the time purchased, you are free to purchase more when required.
